Close Service Contact us Help The new DB90 offers a host of highquality sounds and drum patterns to make your practice sessions more interesting and more musical. Faders, buttons and a large data entry wheel provide direct access to the parameters. Choose from four click sounds including a counting human voice that tells you where you are in the bar. Guitarists, bassists and keyboardists can connect their instrument directly and listen in via optional headphones or the internal speaker the DB90s practice functions can be used with virtually any instrument. This function is also especially interesting for the stage. I am a drummer and have the DB90 attached to my hihat stand. The audible beep and ability to change voice is excellent and if needed there is a handy headphone socket if the click only needs to be heard by you. Im trying to master some new material at the moment and the voice count is extremely helpful. The unit can stand up on its own but using the tap facility is more difficult to use. The display is excellent and clear and its useful to have the moving metronome graphic to really help nail the time. Saving tempos is simple and after a short while you get used the layout and move around at a breeze. Yes it is a premium price but it is also a brilliant premium product. Highly recommend and with the fantastic service from Thomann, you cant go wrong. Send report Total features handling quality Industry standard Bob C., 19.06.2019 Difficult to fault. Robust and very useable.

This thing smokes those apps in versatility. I really like how I can now mix in the triplets at the volume I need and i also love all the jack in and outputs one could imagine needing. The only reason I gave it 4 stars is because the speaker could use an upgrade and the if I run audio through it the sound is significantly worse. Boss, please update the technology and this product will be absolutely perfect. Reviewed in the United States on November 26, 2017 This is a preliminary review. Metronome is LOUD, which was my main want. That shouldnt be hard to find, but is. It has the option of TOCK sound and HUMAN VOICE sorry for the caps, but this is what people are searching for, even if you go to the online forums. The problem with many metronomes, is they sound two different tones, like C and G, and by God I hear C and G, which is most distracting. I want dead, nonmusical sounds. The DB90 has these. So great. The bad news BUILD QUALITY IS ABYSMAL. I mean really, the housing is tackier than any toy, and the little foldout stand in the back feels like itll snap in a light breeze. This is not even remotely the build we expect in an implement of this kind. The cheapest guitar tuner has a better housing than this.

If you drop this on a hardwood floor twice, I bet it just dies. Finally, I already have a Boss adapter, and—given the many, many comments on how many batteries this eats even the maker says it works for only a few hours per battery—the adapter is a must. Just astonishingly crummy, given that this is the “The most advanced metronome available.” Please try again later. 3rd Day Believer 3.0 out of 5 stars Metronome is LOUD, which was my main want. Just astonishingly crummy, given that this is the “The most advanced metronome available.” Please try again later. Please try again later. Kimberly Alice Fitch 1.0 out of 5 stars I owned this same model of Dr Beat for around a decade beginning in 2002 and had no problems. I practiced with it constantly and even dropped it several times with no issues. When I lost it on a plane I hesitated to buy another one of these metronomes because of the cost there are other brands now for much less that include all the functions I need. But, years later, I took the plunge. I was a little wary of how flimsy the stand was, and I just kept it on my desk to practice with at home because its too heavy to lug around. One day the stand popped out while I was using it, and the metronome no longer turns on, just emits a fuzzy sound while the battery is plugged in. Tried changing the battery to no avail. Emailing BOSS for support and hope they come through. Anyway, this is WAY too fragile of a product for something that people need to be able to futz with and press buttons on regularly. Please try again later. Please try again later. Kindle Customer 4.0 out of 5 stars This thing smokes those apps in versatility. Boss, please update the technology and this product will be absolutely perfect. Please try again later. Please try again later. Joe Hall 4.0 out of 5 stars The speaker is louder than every metronome I’ve used. Cons using the headphones there is a lot of noise.

I used it as an insert on my behringer board and no matter what power source, patch cable or direct headphones, the unit is noisy. It’s not noticeable with the onboard speaker but it’s a lot when using it plugged in. Plus the metronome voices sound horrible when plugged in. I use a Roland TD50 VDrum brain and route it’s onboard click to a direct out port in back then insert it into my board. Very expensive metronome that could have better sounds. Please try again later. Please try again later. DMonster 5.0 out of 5 stars I have gone thru at least 9 different metronomes in the past 10 years. The KLIQ was nice until it lost its mind before the year was up. I own a few Korg TM50 units and they are real good, but they are a little too quite for my purpose pipe organs are loud. This is the first time I have tried any of the Boss metronomes and was very immediately impressed with the functionality of it. If there was a higher grading than 5 I would have given this more than five stars. What I like about the Boss DB60 Ease of use. I love the actual sound, it is more of a old wooden tock instead of a digital ping. I can instantly add or change half beats or third beats on the fly and give them different volumes. There is nothing to like about this DB60, and if and when it breaks I am very hard on equipment I will buy another Boss DB60. I have finally found a metronome I really like after 50 years in the business. Please try again later. Please try again later. Kara Elise Kurek 1.0 out of 5 stars Neither the seller nor Amazon will do anything to help me with the exception of referring me to the manufacturer. Very bad business not to stand behind your product. Do not order!!! Please try again later. Please try again later. Criterion Collector 4.0 out of 5 stars It seems like a lot of the features would be most useful for drum practice, but the basic features are useful for practicing any instrument.

Also, the more complex features approach those of a drum machine, so you can use it to simulate playing to a more realistic drumbeat. See the usersupplied images for how to add the optional footswitches. They make it very easy to turn the the unit on and off, and cycle through presets that you have programmed in. You can get an English version from Boss’s website. However, in any language it is pretty brief. For a unit this complex, longer instructions with some examples would help users get more out of it. Note I have not done a web search; there may be tips available in forums, blogs, etc. Please try again later. Please try again later. Jose Hidalgo Herrera 4.0 out of 5 stars There are two small details I dont like if you plug it to Line In of a mixer or piano you will hear static and it sounds terrible. It works ok with headphones. the battery holder lacks the foam to keep batteries tight, feels cheap, I glued a little foam to fix it. Please try again later. Please try again later. D. Granja 3.0 out of 5 stars You can easily adjust the tempo, change how many beats, which beats are sounded, and choose more complex rhythm combinations.g., 67, or 43 time. That's all good, and it's really easy to do. It also has a rotary volume control and it can get about as loud as my cell phone's low battery warning. It only emits one sound, an uninspiring chirp which is slightly higher in tone on the first beat of the measure. It sounds like you flashed back to the 80s and someone is playing pong. Some people might find it annoying, but you'll probably get used to it. There's a handy clip on the back. It will also play continuous computerish reference tones at different note values, if that's of use to you. Finally, the very useful display makes all the functions pretty intuitive and has a good pendulum and flashing LEDs that help visualize the tempo. There is also a mini stereo jack for use with standard headphones. That's where it's horrible.

When using the built-in speaker, the volume control is gradual, as expected. When using the headphone jack the volume control isn't gradual it really jumps up extremely quickly. Without headphones, you'd probably have the volume around 70% or so. However, with the headphones in, anything below 10% isn't really audible and anything above around 15% will be like an ice pick piercing your ear. So, if you go between built-in speaker and headphones I do, depending on the time of day, you will eventually blow your ears out with this when you forget to turn it down. To make matters worse, sure you can find that sweet headphone volume spot of between 10-15%, but the sound through the jack is absolutely horrible and distorted. What a waste that Boss went cheap and careless on that function. I use this for drumming, so that may explain my use scenarios. If you don't use this with headphones, you will probably be very satisfied and it's a good value in its price range. However, because the headphone volume problem is significant, I docked it two stars since it's a one star product in that regard. Please try again later. Please try again later. Docpolo 5.0 out of 5 stars It has some bells and whistles I will probably not use but what I do use is great. I am an adult retired person whose hobby is the violin. I cannot imagine going back to a mechanical metronome. This seems to be a product that would last a lifetime even for a very young person. There are various uses for the product such as tuning, beat, rhythms patterns. Please try again later. Please try again later. Designed to help musicians keep time as they play, the DB90 has a digital interface, allowing players to easily switch time signatures depending on the piece they are playing. It also has a talking function, which replaces the standard metronome tick, and allows musicians to create custom beats with ease as well. I use it consistently. It's easy to use and precise unlike other digital programs that have a delayed start.

I run this through a house mix that sends it to an aviom click channel. When I'm not running through a house mixer I send it through personal mixer that receives a monitor feed giving the ability to balance my own mix and to share with other musicians via headphone channel. I love the ability to add each song in the setlist into the memory which is easy to switch the next song via toggle. The back light can be set to stay on as the stage lights make it hard to see at times. I first experienced this when taking guitar lessons. As with any metronome, this machine keeps a good beat. What sets it above the rest is its versatility. So many rhythms available, and many kinds of beats to focus on. All the outputs allow you to hook it into a PA that can be heard across the Marching field. I use it in class daily. It actually counts the beat "one, two, three, four." Also, I love the tuning function. Some alternative brands have been updated. Verisign. You may have to register before you can post click the register link above to proceed. If youre serious about your music and if youre reading this, you ARE, this is one of the best investments youll make. All the outputs allow you to hook it into a PA that can be heard across the Marching field. When practicing indoors it is plenty loud enough for the whole room. It actually counts the beat "one, two, three, four." Also, I love the tuning function. You'll need to plug it into a PA system in order to use it in a classroom situation.
